SEATTLE (W. T., 7th June. The fire which wiped the entire business porthe buildings. The fire spread rapidly to the south along the west side of Front street, and, in spite of the firemen, gradually worked its way toward the north also. It soon gained such headway as to draw immense crowds to the suot. and many of the onlookers became wildly excited and mally anxious to help the department. The fire had now swept out the rest of the dry goods stores, all the banks, telegraph offices, and newspaper offices in the city, and had gone south of Yesler avenue, south of which lay an immense area covered with tenements, lodging-houses, chean hotels, railroad and steamboat warehouses, wharves, saw and planing mills, and the wholesale district of the town, all built upon piles and sawdust. Here the progress of the fire was terribly rapid. By 8 o'clock the whole area of sixteen squares long by from three to six wide, not counting the long piers on which many of the largest warehouses and mills were built, were involved in the flames, which now lighted up the heavens for many miles.

All estimates of the loss of course vary widely. Nobody puts it at less than $10,900,000 and some rate it as high as $20,000,000. S. Potvin, of Lincoln. Neb., a contractor and builder of thirty years' experience, after looking over the field his morning gave it as his opinion that the were worth $15,000,000.
